Nowadays the vast majority of people are used to immediate communication with their peers. That is the result of people of all ages and backgrounds using cellular phones for a wide range of purposes daily. In fact, mobile phones are much more than mere communication gadgets.

These days personal communication devices stand out due to their usefulness, specially since the internet connection was implemented. The many uses that they have were unimaginable in the past. For example, now we can find information about traffic very quickly, search how to get to a place or send photos or videos of something that is happening at the time of speaking.

Regarding work, now it is possible to store and access a large amount of data at the click of a button. This, along with the use of instant messaging group chats, has supposed a huge increase in efficiency for most companies. The relationships with our family and friends have also suffered a change in which now we tend to be more connected since the transmission of information takes place immediately and, so, more often.

However, we must wonder what kind of relations we want to promote. Today, we tend to be reached by telephone all the time and very often that means being controlled, which usually produces stress. Moreover, the spread of mobile communication has weakened the real communication with our loved ones. Too frequently we substitute a coffee conversation for an impersonal effortless text message.

All in all, we can conclude that, not only have mobile phones become a necessity, but they have profoundly transformed our society making us lazier in our communicative exchanges. Nevertheless, it is up to us the determination of the importance we are going to give them in our lives./ it is up to us how determinant they are going to be in our lives.
